Country Club of Lansdowne

THE COUNTRY CLUB OF LANSDOWNE is the most recent addition to the organizations surrounding Philadelphia in which golf is a prime factor of its being. It must not be confounded with the old Lansdowne Country Club, which went out of existence prior to the new club being organized, although many of the defunct club's members joined the newcomer. The club has, therefore, not been long enough in "the field" for its members to have developed their play on their links into anything approaching what may be termed representative condition. There are promising players in the club and enthusiasm is rampant, but the game is yet in its infancy, so far as an accurate knowledge of the sport is concerned. With little more than a year to its age, the club can boast of a large membership roll and success has marked its footsteps since its inception. Natural advantages for a first-class course abound, and the energetic officials of the club display determination to put these to the fullest possible use. Considering the short time during which the Green Committee has had the course in hand it is surprising to note the excellent condition of the turf through the fair green and on the putting greens. The first, second, fourth and eighth holes are the best on the course, but with added length the others will level out well enough and a long walk from the clubhouse to the first tee and from the last green will be eliminated. And the clubhouse! It is an old family mansion, modernized to suit all conveniences, and the members are to be congratulated in having secured a home so beautiful in its environment and so admirably adapted to their needs.

Devon Golf Club

Colors: Red and green

THE DEVON GOLF CLUB enjoys the distinction of a paradox. It has no clubhouse, yet it is housed in one of the most extensive and costly buildings in the country. Indeed, the club, per se, is a condition unto itself. Called into life by the first fragment breath of early spring, and flourishing in apparently perennial vigor all summer, it fades and dies away on the first approach of each winter, and is as unlike its kindred organizations who worship at the same athletic shrine, as it very well could be. Yet another distinction is enjoyed by the club. Its nine-hole course was the first mapped out in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, and the first team match ever played around the Quaker City was contested over its links. These facts are more fully dealt with elsewhere, but to such enthusiasts as Mr. Angelo T. Freedley, Mr. Sidney G. Fisher,

President

Mr. Marcellus Coxe, Mr. Montgomery Wilcox and the present President, Mr. Lewis A. Riley, the club owes its very existence. At the time of writing there was some talk of the links being abandoned owing to the building encroachments in the neighborhood, but golfers, who have enjoyed the sport over its charming distances, sincerely hope the day is far distant when their opportunities for an indulgence in their favorite pastime is curtailed. The links are well laid out, extending as they do over some 40 acres. Some of the bunkers are artificial; others are natural. The course is flanked on all sides by long lush grass, the presence of which has caused the downfall of many an excellent player from courses not so difficult and soul-trying. A drive and a pitch is demanded at nearly every hole, the fifth is a creak but interest abounds. In looking back to the time when golf was first played over these distances, it is amusing to recall that a card of 100 for the round of nine holes was particularly gratifying to the early membership.

Frankford Country Club

SUCCESS has stamped the efforts of the few enthusiastic golfers, who were responsible for the founding of the Frankford Country Club, in no mistakable manner. Of two years' growth, it can point to a membership of which older clubs might well be proud.

Not that the organization is particularly devoted to golf. On the contrary, its members are most catholic in their tastes and indulge in the whole gamut of sports and recreations, both indoor and outdoor. But the golfing element was mainly responsible for bringing the much mooted point of starting such an organization in the populous district to a head, and to-day they can pride themselves in the knowledge that they have one of the most promising institutions of the kind in the country. Under the guidance of President Foulkrod and the able gentlemen associated with him as officers of the club, no stone and the needs of the golfers have been attended to in most approved style. The ground over which the course is laid out is of a gently undulating nature, with a fair, rich turf, affording exceptionally good lies. The fair green varies in width from 60 to 90 yards. There are no hills to climb, and the whole markers are in sight for nearly every stroke during the round. Visiting golfers express great satisfaction in playing here, because there are no "tricks of the course" to be learned. The putting greens are all comparatively level, with the exception of the ninth to which there is a notable slope. The eighth green is terraced, compelling the player to pitch his approach shot. The course does not abound in natural hazards; in their stead are a number of judiciously placed artificial bunkers. The course affords excellent opportunity for brassy plays as, for the ordinary long driver, there are no less than five brassy strokes in the round of nine holes.

W. W. FOULKROD

Golf Club of the University of Pennsylvania

Colors: Red and blue

THE Golf Club of the University of Pennsylvania, was founded on February 22, 1899, and that it has justified its existence is demonstrated in the splendid showing made by its representatives in the various tournaments, which they have entered. The youngsters have formed the nucleus of several club teams, and with experience they promise to take a high place in the golfing world. Mr. H. Kennedy Hill, the President of the Club, has worked like a Trojan in the interests of the organization. Handicapped out of all proportions by the lack of a links, of their own, Mr. Hill has had to get the young material out for practice on the course of the most kindly disposed club. At the links of the Philadelphia Cricket Club, at Bala, they have been allowed to play under certain restrictions, but the lack of proper facilities, such as the rival institutions of Yale, Harvard and Princeton possess in the shape of excellent courses, has been keenly felt at all times. Notwithstanding this tremendous drawback, the University of Pennsylvania has supplied the runner-up to two intercollegiate championships in the person of Harold B. MacFarland, and with substantial encouragement from the Red and Blue authorities they might make a future showing thoroughly in keeping with the proud record of the University in other branches of sport.

TEAM OF 1902

Huntingdon Valley Country Club

(Associate member of the G. A. P., W. G. A. P. and U. S. G. A.)

Colors: Red, white, black and gold

ALL for one, one for all," would be a fitting motto for the Huntingdon Valley Country Club. Club spirit has been the predominating feature of the organization throughout its existence. Members have lost their individuality for the club; the club has been heart and soul with its members. To this remarkable club spirit must be attributed in no small measure the phenomenal success it has achieved. Founded in 1897 by such energetic men as Mr. W. W. Frazier, the present President; Mr. George H. Frazier, Mr. J. W. Pepper and Mr. Charles D. Barney, it immediately took first rank with local golfing organizations. Its teams captured championship after championship; its individual players were apparently invincible and its women golfers were quickly making national reputations on the links. Other clubs might go their own sweet way; there was nothing spasmodic about Huntingdon Valley. Once decided upon a course of action, and it was the club, backed up by the whole membership that saw it through. Deliberate and thorough in everything it did, and with the members a unit at all times, there is small wonder for surprise it has reached the indisputable place it now occupies. A nine-hole course, sporty, interesting and generally attractive, with a small clubhouse, was the club's beginning. To-day it occupies the old Noble Mansion, on York Road Pike, and directly overlooking Noble Station, and possesses one of the longest 18-hole courses in the country. There was no half-way measure in the move. The club had found its old quarters inadequate for its need and with club "spirit" the change was effected—an old mansion renovated into the most up-to-date clubhouse and a 9-hole course extended to one of 18 holes. The natural advantages of the surrounding country are not frequently equaled. The height upon which the mansion is erected commands an interesting and exclusive view; the scenery around is of unusual beauty, but its character is altogether peaceful and quiet. The country is covered in every direction with gentle hills, many of them crowned with palatial country seats, and it is these hills that are taken full advantage of in the laying out of the course. There is no monotonous flat country to negotiate; it is a strenuous climbing up hill and down dale throughout. "Keep straight" is the important maxim for the course; good lies abound for good play, but trouble lurks
